That band of pilgrims spread, as did, of old, The cloud by ancient Hebrew seer foretold, Which, though a speck upon the distant sky, Expanded o er the mighty concave high. Th unbroken forest from before them fled; And cities great have risen in its stead. What now remains, of that vast wilderness, Is left to cheer the prospect, and to bless The hearts of happy mortals, who may love Among fair Nature s noble scenes to rove. The husbandman upon the fruitful plain, Now, in each autumn, reaps the yellow grain: And school-boy shouts, upon the passing gale, Come up melodious from the lovely vale. America now stands upon the hight Of power: in her young but lordiy might, She made the Despot tremble, as...
