Don t let it fall, said the coachman. Take care. The hen was making a great noise beside them. Tom turned to her. Thank you, dear hen, he said. Now, I m going to take it in to mamma. Walk slowly, said the coachman, and don t let it drop. Tom walked slowly, carrying the egg in both his hands. The dining-room window was open, but he did not see his papa or mamma at it. He went up the garden-steps, and along the passage, very carefully. The dining-room door was shut. Open the door, papa! he called. Please, open the door! Inside the room he heard his mamma say, -- There s Tom; but she did not know what he was carrying in his hand. His papa opened the door. Mammal cried Tom,...
